Black cohosh (Actaea racemosa) is an important herb with numerous reported uses, including the treatment of menopausal symptoms. Endophytic fungi that occur in natural habitats of black cohosh are isolated to evaluate their nutritional value. The anti-inflammatory activity of meadow rue (Thalictrum dioicum) has been attributed to its zeta-caryophyllene (ZC). We conducted an investigation to find out whether black cohosh has ZC. An essential oil analysis of a methanol extract was done, as well as isolation, structural characterization and anti-inflammatory activity evaluation of the ZC. In our study, the essential oil analysis revealed ZC, accounting for 0.0101 +/- 0.0011% of the extracted oil. Cultivation of black cohosh endophytic fungal isolates yielded monoterpene lactones, namely lavandulyl aldehyde and 6-hydroxylinola-5,9(11)-dien-8-one as the major components. ZC isolated from the essential oil was confirmed by EI/GC/MS and NMR. ZC from black cohosh showed anti-inflammatory activity both in vivo (tail-immersion method) and in vitro (10 ng-1 microg/ml solution). The results indicate that black cohosh has ZC, one of the components responsible for its medicinal properties.Q: How can I make a point layer selection if the points are offset I have an asset file with points that I would like to select as a single point layer. Some of the points are offset. When I use the "expand" button to make the selection, the offset points are included. I would like the selection to only include the points that are not offset. Is there a way to remove the offset points when I make the selection? A: In order to make a selection of the points without offset, you can use an algorithm to identify the points and set them as selection. To identify the offset points, you need to calculate the normal of the vectors
