Description The species is a spreading perennial plant growing in upright clumps tall from a taproot. The leaves are deeply lobed with a pinnate leaflet shape, long and broad, hairy to hairless, the tapering lower leaflet long and 1.5 to broad, the upper long and. The inflorescences are heads of yellow ray florets, 2 to 5 per head and broad, with purplish disc florets. The flowering period is from April to June in the northern part of the range and from February to July in the southern part. Distribution and habitat Senecio etymoides is native to the western United States, including New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Colorado. It grows on dry soils on outcrops or rocky slopes at elevations of above sea level. Uses The Yampa, or yellow mule-ears are used as food by the Navajo people, and the Coahuiltecan. The seeds are eaten, roasted, or ground and added to dishes.
