July 1, 2003 - Compendio de Medicina Interna Veterinaria by Stephen J. Ettinger, 9788481746648, available from the Book Depository with free worldwide shipping. S.J.Ettinger Prologue On the night of December 31, 2004 to January 1, 2005, on Christmas Eve, as a blizzard raged over the city, a woman's body was found on the outskirts of Chicago, Illinois. The corpse was not just found, it was found in close proximity to one of the city's many cemeteries. During her lifetime, the deceased was a fairly well-known Chicago prostitute in certain circles and, according to her relatives, led a far from righteous lifestyle.

Administration of corticosteroids (CS) in the rodent results in a transient decrease in the alveolar surface area, which is accompanied by a significant increase in the number of type II pneumocytes. While the present study demonstrates that the surface area of the distal lung is uniformly decreased following administration of CS in both the mouse and rat, we have found that the proportion of type II pneumocytes in the alveolar epithelium is increased by an average of
