Jorma Jorma (real name Johan Carlqvist) is a fictional character in a series of urban fantasy novels written by American author Charlaine Harris. In the novels, Jorma is the head of the Council of Elders, a group of witches who act as judges and police for the World's of Other Worlds, a world consisting of alternate dimensions populated by witches. Jorma is the son of the late Aralorn, a.k.a. Witch Hunter, a famous warrior of her world. Jorma was created as a more 'positive' version of the anti-heroes Harris' other character, the seductive Sookie Stackhouse. Background Jorma was born in the year 1511. He is the son of Aralorn, known as the Witch Hunter, who was killed in the year 1524. Jorma was actually raised by his grandfather, who is also a witch hunter. According to mythology,

Aralorn was the chosen one to serve as the protector of witches. He was killed when the main character of the series, Sookie Stackhouse, was less than a year old. While still a young man, Jorma was sent to the kitchen to learn the fine art of butchery. He then took the position of the cook of the Council of Elders in Rookery.

After his mother's death, Jorma became a mentor to his young wards. Jorma has strong bonds with a number of his fellow witches. He is extremely protective of his young wards, and he is good friends with Belmond. He once spent a year as a Travelling Companion to Mab Monroe, which was briefly mentioned in the romance novel, The Other Fifty. According to the prequel novella, A Circle of Magic, Jorma also has a great affection for Leelee Sobieski, the daughter of two witches who have become a close companion to him. He also has a close friendship with Lucien Wilkes, the gay Preacher of Merlotte's Bar, and for a short period of time, carried on c6a93da74d
