development and evaluation of a low-cost mid-infrared flow-through reactor for simultaneous nitric oxide and dissolved organic carbon measurement. A low-cost, disposable mid-infrared reactor has been developed and evaluated for simultaneous nitric oxide (NO) and dissolved organic carbon (DOC) measurements. The reactor was constructed using materials commonly available at school chemistry laboratories and small quantities of consumable chemicals. The reactor consisted of a cylindrical reactor chamber fabricated from a No. 4 glass bottle and a crimped Teflon inlet tube. The infrared radiation transmitted through the NO and DOC absorbing medium passed through an internal light guide to an IR detector. The use of disposable consumables maximises the sensitivity of the measurements and reduces the overall cost. Flow-through measurements were compared to static batch measurements using a commercial NO analyzer. Spectral transmittance spectra measured in the reactor were compared to those from standard flow-through glass cells and the results showed good agreement. The developed reactor had a lower limit of detection for NO of 0.5 micromol L<sup>-1</sup>, and a lower limit of detection for DOC of 4 micromol L<sup>-1</sup>. The lovely and talented Alexandra Anele The lovely and talented Alexandra Anele was born in this crazy world in 1978. Not only did she start modeling at the age of fourteen, she didn't stop there; she became, and still is, a very successful commercial illustrator and businesswoman. Alexandra's body of work which you may have seen before she jumped into modeling is very creative. She also loves fashion and is most interesting of all with all her projects. She is one of the funniest and most witty people you can find, not to mention she's easy on the eyes, so if that isn't enough, you should definitely check out what she has to offer. She takes time for herself and her fans, but when she does things, she does them right.

Bacterial infection in the anterior cruciate ligament: when are prosthetic ligament substitutes worth the risk of reinjury? Operative stabilization of symptomatic anterior cruciate ligament injury is a well-established treatment modality. However, it is impossible to avoid the possibility of reinjury. Studies reporting the occurrence of infection following such procedures are scarce. A literature search was
