It has been proposed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,603,165 to measure the level of fluid in a tank by a plurality of spaced-apart probes, the probes being immersed in the fluid and being arranged to transmit an electrical signal to a transmitter at the bottom of the tank. The signals from the probes are transmitted via a common cable to a receiver unit located at the bottom of the tank, and via the cable to a display unit located outside the tank. Such a system is complicated to install, difficult to remove and adjust to accommodate containers of different volumes, and provides only a single measurement. If it is desired to measure the level of liquid at two or more positions, it is necessary to install a separate transmitter at each of these positions.

An object of the present invention is to provide a simplified level measurement system which avoids the above-mentioned drawbacks.Orthocomotis margaritana Orthocomotis margaritana is a species of moth of the family Tortricidae.
